

WORLD POPULATION DAY – Uganda Themes

“a reflection on our Commemoration Journey”

OMORO - Looking back in our history, Uganda over time has put our population issues at the centre of its development plans and programmes. In 1995, the first National Population Policy was promulgated by government.

BUSIA - Uganda is blessed with a youth bulge or a big proportion of youth in its population. There are numerous opportunities for socio-economic development of the country if this youthful population is adequately skilled, healthy and gainfully employed, which will result in a Demographic Dividend for Uganda.

ISINGIRO - Even though Uganda has made significant progress in tackling poverty, insecurity and improving opportunity for the marginalised including youth through entrepreneurship and education, many remain silently desperate for a new dawn in their lives. Unfortunately, those most left behind are girls, specifically those in their teenage years.

SEMBABULE - Uganda has one of the most progressive policies for refugees that protects and advances the dignity and the rights of refugees. "The policy gives a refugee an opportunity to move freely without curtails to interact with, and also enjoy the same kind of services as the Ugandan population.

DOKOLO - Instead of viewing our nation's young population as a hindrance to economic development, let's embrace it and leverage our resources. Getting our young people into the right jobs is beneficial for Uganda. The global health sphere, for one, has many critical roles available for our young people.
